IMMEDIATE RELEASE

USD COURSE TO EXPLORE POPULATION PROBLEM

SAN DIEGO, Calif.--A University of San Diego course to be offered in the spring semester will explore the population problem, the extent of the problem and the morality of the proposed solutions.

Offered for graduate as well as undergraduate credit, "Demography and Population," sociology 118 and 218, is given by Miss Janet Jensen, assistant professor of sociology. The class will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7 to 8:15 pm, beginning Feb. 2. The last day of scheduled classes will be May 18, followed by exams.

In addition to familiarizing the students with the principles and data of demography, Miss Jansen will examine the solutions proposed for this nation, other highly industrialized nations, and the under-developed countries.

She asks if this is a problem of too many people or one of being able to allocate the world's resources. Also, if there is a problem, what measures can be taken that will maintain an ecological balance, what are the morally justified means of meeting the problem.

Registration information is available by writing USD, Alcala Park, or telephoning 291-6480, ext. 253.
